It was a trip I'll never forget. Once on a cool summer morning we and my parents set off to a camping park near a lake. We had to travel a long distance, so, although we decided to go by car, we spent a lot of time on the road. To make it less boring we sang songs, told jokes and stared out the window on the bewildering landscape. Then, when the sun was almost lost behind the mountains we found ourselves stranded.

Fortunately, we had everything we needed to make a rather small tent and set a campfire. Though, it was quite challenging to do in the twilight. The next morning father woke us up with a strange expression on his face - I have never seen him so confused.

- That's so bizarre! - told he. The map says that this exact place is supposed to be the camping park! There is the lake - he pointed north, - but no people nor any tents.

We were extremely tired, but we had to head back. Dad decided to visit grandpa on our way, since there might not be enough fuel left in our car to drive all the way home. After a warm welcome we told him the story about the camp. - It's been gone since the 90's! No wonder you couldn't find it.

That left us in shock.

Our family will never forget this story. So, next time we decide to take a trip somewhere we won't be so ignorant and check the dates on our maps.
